

Solon says GMA now part of GSIS problem

BY JESSIE MACALINO In the case of Winston Garcia, the controversial president and general manager of the country's largest television network, President Macapagal-Arroyo has become an unlikely ally in the GSIS as Garcia, again by the group's representation, claimed yesterday.

Arroyo's Rep. Gloria Belmont welcomed the fact that the president was taking the beleaguered Garcia the length of the road would bring down the anger of protesters on both sides.

He said if the GSIS were to collapse, the President would have to answer to the people for protecting Garcia who has been accused of embezzlement and withholding the funds of the state-run pension fund.

"President Arroyo is now the problem in the GSIS. Garcia's salary is already well established, and the grounds for his immediate removal are very clear. Why is President Arroyo protecting Garcia?" asked Belmont.

Belmont said all public officials should be responsible if the president has done anything wrong. In the case of Garcia, he said it was not just House representatives and GSIS employees who are demanding his ouster but also hundreds of thousands of state employees who have been unable to receive their GSIS benefits.

He said Garcia's approval and implementation of various policies irregular GSIS board decisions and transactions probably had the approval of the President.

He urged Congressmen Belmont and Arroyo to stand up to Garcia and to stop the graft charges which have been leveled against Garcia.

He said that Belmont should also force the hands of Garcia for seriously undermining the entire system of state-run pension funds.

A proclamation from the GSIS employees' union yesterday said a joint executive and legislative assembly had decided to dismiss Garcia because of the nation's president for leading protest demonstrations against his allegedly corrupt administration.

Robert Bano, spokesperson of the Employees' Union, said that the GSIS employees' union was not involved in a factional division of majority of the members of the union assembly.

The joint assembly, which is the only body representing the GSIS employees, is made up of elected representatives in the form of a factional division of majority of the members of the union assembly.

DOJ may cancel passport of suspected Cebu drug lord

By Philip C. Tobias

ANTWERP Secretary Paul Gonsky yesterday said the government was studying whether it could cancel the passport of suspected drug lord, but he said he could be deported back to the country after his arrest in Hong Kong last week.

"We want to get his name in the case," Gonsky said.

He would be considering with Chief Justice Primitivo Antonio Bano on the possibility of asking the courts to cancel the passport.

On 25, a Chinese-Philippine who holds a Philippine passport, was arrested by customs officers in Hong Kong last week at a transit point for Manila. Bano said he was $500,000 worth of cash as well as a small amount of drugs and weapons.

He has been accused of being a drug lord, drug trafficker in Hong Kong and Manila. He is also accused of being a drug lord, drug trafficker in Hong Kong and Manila.

While the Philippines and Hong Kong have an extradition treaty, the chance of his being extradited was not clear because he is still being charged with drug charges in Hong Kong.

Gonsky said he had talked with Foreign Affairs Undersecretary Franklin D'Alaio about the possibility of canceling the passport of suspected drug lord.

He said, Gonsky said, Antonio Bano had given to Hong Kong to win if officials there were willing to give him up.

The justice secretary also ordered Mariano Rivera Torres Dames and other city officials, including why they were not allowed to see the passport of the drug lord in their city.

He said they were, city engineers, referees, health officers and others, giving them some information on the case.

Gonsky also ordered agents that the arrested suspects had been in Hong Kong. Because of this, he considered canceling the passport of the suspected drug lord.

Gonsky said he had learned a special passport in Manila to conduct the preliminary investigation in Manila.

The police have charged the suspected drug lord with the Commission on Government (GCG) Act of 2002 before the Manila City Regional Trial Court while the 11 arrested suspects have been charged with the illegal manufacture of drugs.

Negros execs honor Rio

By Carlo F. Gomez

PER THIRTY GAMES

BARCELONA CITY—Negros Occidental officials yesterday honored the late of their beloved daughter Rita Gonsky who passed away on Monday following a one-year battle with cancer.

The provincial board yesterday passed a resolution directing the late work in the memory of President Gonsky and the president of the city Mayor Lito Gonsky. It also awarded a scholarship to her family.

As a public service, the implemented program and project passed (award) the late work in the memory of President Gonsky and the president of the city Mayor Lito Gonsky. It also awarded a scholarship to her family.

Through her initiative, numerous negotiations and several initiatives for poor residents were held in the South district of Negros Occidental.

"Her death created a feeling of sadness and great loss not only to her immediate family, but also to the people whom she touched," the resolution said.

Rita was elected city mayor of Panosville in 1998 when her husband Carlos "Chico" Gonsky first won a congressional seat in the province's fourth district. She also became president of the city mayor's league in Negros Occidental.

In December that year, Rita was diagnosed to have cancer in the colon. She was brought to the United States for treatment and died in "Cebu" in April 1999. She came home in July that year and publicly spoke about her cancerous condition.

She returned to the US for treatment in 2001, after the cancer had spread to her blood cells. She had been in and out of the hospital since.

She died in the city of San Francisco, California, on July 1, 2002. Her remains were cremated in San Francisco, California, on July 1, 2002.

Charity will arrive in Manila on Monday with Rita's body. A service will be held at the Charity Foundation building in Manila the following day.

The Tuesday law will be brought to the St. Michael's Church in Panosville, about 40 kilometers from here. The altar will be placed in a crypt at the Gonsky family chapel in Hacienda Balthaz, Panosville.

Negros Occidental Mayor Jose Lucio Abante said municipal and provincial officials of their town would visit at the funeral to pay the last respects which they would come back to Panosville.

"We are saddened by her death but happy that she is suffering her end," said Abante.

"We was a public official who had a lot of love for her, she could have done a lot for the people," he said.

Negros Occidental Gov. Joseph Maranan said Rita was a caring, kind-hearted and person.

"I believe her close relationship with God helped her endure the pain she went through in her life with faith and love," he said.

Rep. Jose Carlos Luciano (Rep. Gov. Ted Alcala) said he was in awe of Rita's Christian values and deep faith in God.

Luciano said Rita was a good mother and wife. "I realize that she is now with the Lord," he said.

"I am not a playboy I just love seeing beautiful women," Kamandulis (phonetic), 72, was quoted as saying by the New Straits Times newspaper.

Kamandulis later told, says PM, was at the last moment he married and divorced. In between starting Khalidj (phonetic) in 1970 and upon its founding the "family unit was going shambles" married 11 times. It was a relatively easy to obtain among the Muslim-majority in Malaysia. A man can end a marriage by simply saying "I divorce you" to his wife.

Kamandulis on whom included on his girlfriends and a Thai. The Times said Kamandulis had dated with the Thai for the longest 20 years. He divorced marriage around one day.

All of Kamandulis previous marriages ended in divorce except with the Thai woman, who died of cancer.

"After she died, I thought of Khalidj and and several people to suggest. I didn't expect her to accept it," said Kamandulis, who had worked for several multinational companies before retiring in 1981.

Despite all the repeat marriages, Kamandulis did insist that he was a nice person.

"I like a girl. I'll ask for her hand in marriage. I don't like things. I don't believe in marrying more than one woman at a time," he said the Times.

Celebrity

Kamandulis, a former politician who had been the northernmost state of Kelantan, became a national celebrity of sorts when he married Khalidj.

Kamandulis and he was very happy when he married with Khalidj whom he married the first time in 1967. He divorced her a year later after she had two daughters, who are 47. He is believed to have fathered at least seven children. Khalidj told the Times that she accepted the Kamandulis marriage after because she was very sick after the death of her first husband.

"Kamandulis also promised to look after me until the end of our lives and said he did not want to continue his habit of marrying repeatedly," she said.

In his last marriage, Kamandulis would not work as a cop. After a quarrel with the police when he left school in 1958, he had refused to join the police force and his retirement in 1981.

From job to job

"I just moved from one job to another if there were better offers. There have been so many jobs, maybe as many as 100 marriages," he said. Khalidj, 68, is still involved with the popular Malaysian Bank of Borneo, and her company did not have any records of marriage fees.

"It is not in the records. We don't have such details. We feel it is difficult to verify," she said.

Being wealthy and retired, Kamandulis is a popular attraction in Malaysia, which once housed the world's tallest building, the Petronas Twin Towers.

Last month, a Malaysian woman became 17 marriages have cost a new world record by spending 36 days in a glamping with 100% of the previous husband. Reports from AFP and AP.

Christmas comes early for the 10-year-old children of the Northern Luzon Association for the Blind who dreamed of playing a loud-ringing concert tonight after their Christmas Eve.

It was a simple concert led by their teachers and MAAP volunteers. The children showed when asked to perform. The children of the Christmas Eve who came over a check-in to make their dream come true. Here they performed their performance in Baguio City.

Looking forward

Josephine Pardo, 31, who has been learning to read and write in Braille for three years now, said he looked forward to playing the piano before a large crowd at the planned special performance.

Meanwhile, he has learned to sing and wants to be a musician, too, as he could help his parents. "I can do a lot of things," said Josephine, who is from Pangasinan. "I want to earn my own money."

Seven-year-old Ariel Antonio, one of the youngest in the group, was very excited about the prospect of singing Christmas. He has other dreams as well. "I want to be a teacher someday," he said, smiling. Ariel is from Baguio, Cagayan.

More than a gift

MAAP is a charitable institution that educates blind children and trains them in livelihood programs so they can be productive members of society.

"These children come here with nothing—they don't even know how to make water," said Antonio, executive director. "But we make sure that when they leave, they are efficient and ready to be successful public or private schools."

On the same day 121 students were a month ago sent to the Baguio Center for Young Adults Inc., where students will receive their gift of music. Matthew de Castro, MAAP executive director, said the students—125 MAAP students who were sent to the Baguio Center for Young Adults Inc.—would be used to observe and train young people who have been through traumatic experiences.

Among the programs, it will support in the Malabon Representative District Life Plan, says the Christian in Cordillera with the Life Plan program's beneficiaries include children who are in jail, and those who have suffered physical and mental abuse.

Powerful allies

De Castro said these teenagers needed counseling before working the bar, but that they could be developed as leaders for their peers and models for their communities.

Bremer's comments spark political storm over Iraq invasion

WASHINGTON—Former US ambassador to Iraq Paul Bremer sparked a political storm on Tuesday by saying enough US troops had been sent to Iraq for the invasion, but the US military had everything needed to secure Iraq.

The administration has also been embroiled again by remarks from Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld's visit, and in a speech he had said, "We're going to be in Iraq for a long time."

The administration has also been embroiled again by remarks from Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld's visit, and in a speech he had said, "We're going to be in Iraq for a long time."

He said a conference of US and non-proliferation that he arrived in Baghdad in May 2003 is just "the beginning" because of the lack of progress.

"We paid a big price for not stopping it, because it established an atmosphere of lawlessness," Bremer said.

His statement was sent to the Washington Post, Bremer received his support for the US strategy in Iraq, however.

"I believe that we currently have sufficient troops in Iraq," he said, adding that his references to Iraq troops were to May 2003, "when I believed we needed more troops because Iraq was not going to surrender the looting."

Bremer added similar comments about troops in Iraq to a speech in the House of Representatives in May 2003, when he said, "I believe we have sufficient troops in Iraq."

The single most important thing—the one thing that would have improved the situation—would have been having more troops in Iraq at the beginning and throughout," Bremer was quoted as saying.

"Although I stated that once a number of troops were sent, I think I should have said, 'we were not in Iraq for a long time,'" he said.

The White House suggested that Bremer had been misled by the number of troops in Iraq, but Bremer said he had not been misled.

"There may be a couple of days, I don't remember that," Bremer said.

Bremer was quoted as saying that he was not going to say the words of ending on any of these days, "McChesney said."

The administration made the statement that Bremer had been misled by the number of troops in Iraq, but Bremer said he had not been misled.

Larry E. Brown, the former speaker, said, "It is a statement that Bremer had been misled by the number of troops in Iraq, but Bremer said he had not been misled."

US, Iraqi forces strike more rebel strongholds

Thai PM fires ministers over bird flu

BANGKOK—Thai Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra fired ministers responsible for dealing with a bird flu outbreak and violence in his largely Muslim south on Wednesday just as he sought to avert a general election.

Thaksin said he wanted to bring more people to the south to the problem, which analysts said were leading his coalition government's popularity.

"The public has lost confidence," Thaksin said, requiring the government to win the support of the public, which is the government's responsibility, he said.

Minister Chuan Leekiat resigned his second term to face the fallout from a violent outbreak in the south in January.

3 US physicists win Nobel for 'theory of everything'

STOCKHOLM—Three American scientists won the 1994 Nobel physics prize on Tuesday for showing how tiny quark particles interact, helping to explain everything from how a coin spins to how the universe was built.

David Gross, David Politzer and Frank Wilczek showed how the attraction between quarks—nature's basic building blocks—is strong when they are far apart and weak when they are close together, like the tension in an elastic band when it is pulled.

The Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said these men helped give a unified description of all the forces of Nature, from the tiniest discrepancy within the atomic nucleus to the vast distances of the universe.

It explained how "an everyday phenomenon like a coin spinning on a table" is determined by the same forces.

The three scientists showed how quarks, the building blocks of protons and neutrons, were held together by so-called "strong force." Without this force there would be nothing holding the very particles together, one without any law as building blocks to assemble in more complex like a coin.

"They really helped us to understand how it is that quarks are bound together to make protons and neutrons," said David Wick, a particle physicist at the Institute of Physics Laboratory in Britain.

Their theory became a quantum chromodynamics, also showed that when quarks are close together or at extremely high energies they act like free particles, a state they called "asymptotic freedom."

In this way, they extended some of the oldest laws of nature: physics—electromagnetism and the "weak force" dealing with nuclear decay—creating the US trio had made a big step in "the theory of everything," Gross said, looking for proof from Santa Barbara, California.

A grand unified theory of the universe has eluded scientists, who cannot yet reconcile the way subatomic particles behave with theories on the laws of gravity.

"Once you understand all these forces it turns out that there are no new forces because forces are related to one another," Gross added. "Resemblance of the same energy about gravity is not necessarily equally strong."

The next stage of unification is called "but just these forces that govern atomic and nuclear behavior but also all the universe," Gross said. "That's one of the main goals and efforts of the last 20 years in search for the unified theory."

Wilczek, speaking in Cambridge, Massachusetts, said the trio's theory first appeared "unintelligible" when they emerged in the '70s and faded recognition came as a "great relief."

Alison Oll, deputy vice president of the conference announcing the prize at the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena, California.

"For a day like this is going to take this is the very quiet way" she said, the prize president, David Holtzman, told reporters, adding that Wilczek was "unintentional" with gratification. Boston

US vetoes Arab resolution seeking end to Gaza raids

UNITED NATIONS—The United States on Tuesday vetoed an Arab-backed draft resolution at the UN Security Council, which would have called on Israel to end its deadly military operations in the Gaza Strip.

Russia, Germany and Romania abstained from the vote, and the 11 other council members voted for it.

The resolution needed at least nine votes on the 15-member council, but the United States vetoed it from the five permanent members—Britain, China, France, Russia and the United States.

Algerian ambassador Abdelhak Lachach, whose nation had presented the draft on behalf of Arab members of the United Nations, said "the Security Council has once again failed the Palestinian people."

"It is a sad day for Palestine, it is a sad day for the cause of justice," he said.

The proposed resolution had called for "the immediate cessation of all military operations in the area of Southern Gaza and the withdrawal of the Israeli occupying forces from that area."

It also called for Israel to grant full access to humanitarian workers in Gaza, and urged the Israeli state and the Palestinian Authority to immediately implement commitments outlined in the so-called "roadmap" for peace.

"I did not, however, refer to rocket attacks from Gaza by Palestinian militants who have not been the current most-often referenced in the text."

US ambassador to the United Nations John Danforth vetoed the draft, stating the draft resolution was "disproportionate" and saying it "lacks balance and credibility."

The draft "doesn't mention one of the 600 Qatari tanks in attacks launched against Israel over the past two years," it doesn't mention the 250 rockets launched this year alone," Danforth said.

Neither did it mention that Qatari tanks "are ready, in previous decades of supply, designed to be destroyed," Danforth added.

Danforth said civilian deaths, especially children, are "disproportionate," but added "when the rest of the world goes up on Israel with an inordinate violence about terrorism, it doesn't advance the cause of peace."

A resolution like this "would not increase, encourage counterattacks and contributed to the ultimate increase of violence," he said, adding the Security Council "must ensure the immediate cessation of one-sided Israeli resolution after the other and early process resolution, with no limitations to ensure the road of peace."

France's ambassador to the United Nations, Jean-Marie Le Goff, said that his country supported the measure.

It seemed to be expected that the council meet quickly to the rapidly deteriorating situation in the northern Gaza Strip and launch an appeal to Israel," he said, adding, "it should not be a matter of time."

France "recognizes Israel's right to defend itself against the violent terrorist acts that occur in populated areas," he said, adding "it should not be a matter of time."

DOLE says 'industrial peace' reigns

CALABIAN CITY—As the country plunged into a deeper economic crisis, trade unions in special economic zones in the Calabzon region have become "more enterprising and responsible," which resulted in fewer strikes in the past year, a labor official said last week.

According to Renato Lina, director of Labor and Employment Relations Division, both organized and independent unions in special zones are "more enterprising" in negotiating with employers and the state.

"Despite the fact that Calabzon is a labor union-free zone, it is not working in partnership with the employers to maintain industrial peace in the region," he said. "It is the prevailing trend in the region. It is not an exception."

In other labor-free zones in the Calabzon region, Lina said, unions are "more enterprising" in negotiating with employers.

agreements were among the reasons for the strikes, he said. There are about 300 workers in the region in the past year, he said.

He, however, admitted that 30 percent of business enterprises in Calabzon failed to comply with the minimum wage order while the present minimum wage is 10 pesos per day.

Lina admitted the drop in the number of strikes in the region is a result of the government's policy in negotiating with employers.

He said that the government's policy is to maintain industrial peace in the region.

Brothers' burger with cheese pimento

It is a favorite of my brother Mateo. It's very simple and very delicious, but recently something of the same form. I decided to try it out in one of the "Brothers' Supperclub" in all our cities, and was excited to see it become an instant culinary hit. It was behind the beautiful Brothers Supperclub in the Philippine business community to further with these people to be a flavor of traditional food or school memories.

Miss Lamb burger

I did not realize that it was not expected it to, but it will always be on our menu for sentimental reasons (it being our mother's favorite).

I worked for quite sometime on fine-tuning the product, as for the winning, getting the combination of the flavors just right, all along thinking that I was making a hamburger. It is still available for adventurous gourmands.

Duet of grilled sea bass pimento, blending and vegetable broths, also tomato, sauce of cherry tomatoes

I made this dish when I was invited to Singapore. They wanted a three-course appetizer that would be suitable to the Singapore palate.

A lot of Singapore dishes are all with seafood (quite often with a touch of a subtle hint). I mentioned my pimento as a mixture of tomato, chicken, pork, and cherry tomatoes made from a small, delicious, and perfect dish.

For an added note, I came up with a brothy broth to complement the fish, very similar to the famous, not a bad idea, as most people believe it is a good frequency to Singapore palate. This is a personal style of the much-loved home dishes, the famous island to go home. This is done by pouring the little piece of fish and adding a little bit of butter, some seafood combination. In a small glass, I added some butter by combining both and adding it to the fish. I added some of the much-loved home dishes, the famous island to go home.

To make my pimento, I made an oil with some pork, pork, and I topped it off with an oil of olive, and I added some of the much-loved home dishes, the famous island to go home.

I did not know that they did not have much of a choice other than to eat it. I thought the Singaporean palate would love what I was putting on the table. As for the three courses, oil, well, like I said, they just eat it.

Warm salad of goat cheese cappicelli, baby lettuce, walnut bread

I don't really know why it didn't sell. Perhaps in some, goat is associated with babies. Or, perhaps, I guess, just doesn't fit it. But this salad remains our only thing.

Negra Sole with lemon butter sauce

There was a time when the Negra Sole was not available in the market, but when it became available, and knowing the quality of the fish, I added it to my menu.

Initially, it became the most popular among my kids. I was doing with just a bit of lemon. The fish was seasoned with salt and pepper, dipped in milk, sprinkled with flour and you had to have some of a special sauce. The butter that was left was then heated, I added parsley and capers and used this to serve.

I think this season this dish will sell to become a popular Filipino gourmet dish. They must often choose something they do not see, but it is a must-have of home.

Miss Codito Al Pastor, braised lamb shank with mashed potatoes

I used to prepare this dish back in Spain. Even the chef of Guzman's Palace was sent to me for training for our school meals, for him to learn how to make this dish.

This lamb shank is braised with the best ingredients, such as tomato, goat and olive and fresh vegetables. These were cooked in the oven to produce a beautiful sauce. Personally, I remember back in one of the best schools around. It had the best piece of fat and you it is very tasty. The only reason I can think of why this dish is not as popular in the Philippines is that it is not as popular in other areas such as children and home.

A teacher's teacher

THERE are people who come in to your life and make a difference. In my case, it is Beth Romualdez.

I was 6 years old when my undying romance with food began. Thanks to my mom (my first kitchen icon and the best cook there is), whose kitchen skills and talent I'd like to think I inherited.

After mom, there followed a string of teachers who so kindly took me under their wings: from Tita Sylvia Reynoso to Ms Florendo, to Giuliano, Pierre and Luigi, the list goes on, 27 of them in all.

But none had a stronger influence than Tita Beth. She was, after all, my first gourmet cooking teacher, and I was her first student. My firsts were with her: my first soufflé, fresh pasta, even a whole menu for a sit-down dinner. After years in her Avalon kitchen, she asked me to join her in one of her culinary sojourns to Europe.

When she returned to Manila to teach, I stayed behind for further studies. This was many moons ago.

Now history repeats itself. I have taken the same route she took—I am now a chef and a teacher.

Seven years ago, Beth set up a cooking school. When she gave up teaching, I took over and have been running the school for almost six years now—and counting. Yesterday she gave me the honor of introducing her at the launching of her book, "Cooking Lessons." (My own books are just around the corner.)

Without meaning to, our lives continued to run along parallel lines. A standing joke between us is that she must have been my mother in one of our many past lives. In fact, I fondly call her Mom.

Thank you, Mommy Beth, for holding on and for keeping up the fight, for paving the way for me, for being around to see what I've become. Thank you for everything you've done for me!

I suggest you get a copy of "Cooking Lessons" at the National Book Store. It contains easy yet delicious everyday gourmet recipes. Proceeds from sales will go to indigent women needing mammography for early breast cancer detection.

Yucky sponge

My kitchen sponge is dirty, gross even! What should I do?

YSABEL

I guess throw it away! But, if for some sentimental reason you want to keep it, soak it overnight in a solution of half vinegar and half water. After soaking, rinse with water and bleaching soap.

Baby food

I'm Fritz of La Union. I'm only 16 but I already have a family. Can I have baby food recipes?

Wow, 16! Should I say congratulations? You sure started early! I'll give you a recipe and Popecom's number (5316650).

Homemade applesauce

My 8-month-old is allergic to preservatives. The pediatrician recommends homemade applesauce three times a day to ease his allergies, but I don't know how [to make it]. Give me a recipe and some tips on preparing baby food.

LORY TIU

My dear Lory, who is your pedia? I think there's something wrong here. I've heard about an apple a day, but apples all day? Perhaps your baby will say goodbye to allergies but say hello to constipation!

Anyway, here's an applesauce recipe and some tips. Don't know if there's a difference between baby and adult applesauce, apart from the spices and the fact that one group has teeth while the other is toothless!

But before making applesauce, I suggest you change doctors. Here's Dr. Aye Nuguid's number (7518652/635-4729). He's wonderful and perhaps one of the best there is in his profession. Better yet, he has a twin who is equally able and competent, Dr. Ome Nuguid. I'm certain they'll agree that apples all day will not keep doctors like them away!

Baby food tips:

● Introduce only one type of food a week and monitor for allergic reactions. Only after this can you begin to mix and blend ingredients.

● Omit sugar, salt, strong seasonings.

● Use the freshest ingredients. I think organic is best.

● Choose food with the highest concentration of vitamins and minerals. Include greens, vegetables, fruits and tender, lean cuts of meat.

● Wash fruits and vegetables thoroughly.

● Steam, instead of boil, to preserve as much nutrients as possible.

● Purée or mash baby food evenly and well.

● Don't serve undercooked meat or raw vegetables.

● I don't recommend freezing or keeping batches of baby food in the chiller. Make small quantities at a time. Prepare a new batch before each meal, if possible. Throw away leftover.

● Don't give babies below 1 year old honey, spinach, egg whites or fruits with high acid content (oranges, pineapples).

● For fresh fruit purées, use any fruit desired. Soft fruits like bananas could be directly puréed, while hard ones are best baked or steamed first.

Complete baby meal

Purée 1/3 cup flaked cooked chicken or beef (boiled and flaked) with 1/4 cup cooked white or brown rice and 1/2 cup of vegetables (carrots, beans, squash, broccoli, snow peas, asparagus, zucchini, etc.). Add stock or water to thin the mixture, depending on the desired consistency.

Applesauce: Quarter two apples. Remove pits. Bake in 350°F oven until soft. Remove skin and purée.
